Most life science companies are partnering with external organizations that have specialized expertise to develop and manufacture their products in an effort to streamline operations. As with any partnership, there is risk and uncertainty that comes into play when utilizing a contract manufacturing organization.

Sponsors are continually looking for new and efficient ways of managing risk and ensuring the best quality standards. CMO selection is another process that is continuously improved and reevaluated based on the marketplace and a sponsor's need for production. It is critical to assess potential vendors before signing a contract and beginning a partnership.

The 9th CMO Quality Oversight and Risk Management Summit will optimize the collaboration between sponsors and vendors by addressing the most pressing topics including data integrity, quality systems, relationship management, risk management and more.
